"The Unknown Purple"

ROLAND WEST'S play of mystery, which the Arab Patrol, Aleppo Temple, has been fortunate in securing for its theater party at the Majestic Theater on Monday Evening, January 5th, comes to Boston after having thrilled New York playgoers for an entire theatrical year.

In creating "The Unknown Purple" Mr. West laid aside all rules of play writing, but it seems that he has given theatergoers just what they were seeking, inasmuch as the piece enjoyed a record breaking run at the Lyric Theater, New York. Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago will be the only cities visited this season, after which the play will open an indefinite engagement at the Savoy Theater, London, with the cast intact, same as programmed for the Boston engagement.

It is a story of love, intrigue, and mystery which even the Secret Service could not unravel; as a matter of fact the audience may write their own climax. The author has left to the imagination the final ending. If V. Cromport could make you happy by marrying "Ruth," the sweet "little mother," you may have it that way. If you would see him back in the arms of his former vampire wife, you have the privilege. But according to advance information, you are sure to have it one way or the other, and if you are seeking a super-dynamic thrill, there are one hundred and fifty of them in so many minutes.

This style of entertainment is entirely new to the stage, inasmuch as Mr. West has brought into play his motion picture experience, depicting the flash-back of the silent drama on the spoken stage.

The scenes are enacted before the audience with an ante-climax off stage; in an instant the whole scene is changed and the action of the drama off stage presented to the audience. In order to obtain this effect it is necessary to carry a special stage with a mechanical contrivance that eliminates any waits.

The play is unique in construction inasmuch as the author has brought into play a purple ray, which makes a man invisible at will. Even in cold type it is easy to assume the thrill brought forth from a man who envelopes himself in a purple mist before the very eyes of the audience and with unseen hands opens a safe, steals a diamond necklace, and wafts aft about the stage, berating his victims with hollow mockery. Detectives with drawn revolvers stand powerless to act in the face of this phenomena.

Miss Jean Stuart, who will be remembered by local theatergoers for her splendid work in "Seven Days Leave" and "The Wanderer" is happily cast in the role of Jewel Marchmont, a vampire character. Miss Stuart plays opposite to George Probert, who is "mysteriously" delightful as V. Cromport.
